Recent fortunes were reversed in January 2011 as the Small Industrials (up 0.4%) outperformed the Small Resources (down 5.2%), with the overall Small Ordinaries Accumulation Index being down 2.2%. The Fund modestly out-performed this decrease and has now out-performed the benchmark in 24 out of 28 months since inception (in gross terms).

Market Outlook

January as per normal was very quiet on the corporate front with most companies in an information black out period prior to releasing their interim results in February. There were a few minor profit updates during the month and they tended to be neutral to positive. In particular there were some very encouraging retail company announcements from companies such as Kathmandu and Breville Group. It would appear that retail sales have been fairly strong since Christmas after a pretty subdued period prior to that. The other major event during January was the severe flooding in Queensland. However we only envisage this having a short term impact on a very small percentage of companies held in the fund, with the potential for enhanced medium term activity levels associated with flood recovery.

Overall we maintain our positive resources bias particularly on the services side given the continuing favourable outlook for big mining projects. The resources story will be further enhanced should the emerging positive data points coming out of Europe and the US turn into a more sustained recovery. The domestic non-mining economy continues to face muted activity levels due to continuing weakness in construction spending. We will not be considering any major changes now until during and after the February interim reporting season.
